Background and Introduction:

Realizing the catalytic role of higher education in realizing the Sustainable Development Goals (SDG), globally, the different stakeholders are working actively through n number of collaborative alliances and initiatives. Post 2015, one can see many SDG mainstreaming interventions by the international agencies, developmental organization, regulatory bodies, accreditation agencies, non-governmental organizations, institutional associations as well as the institutional level initiative. In order to create the awareness, sensitization and action initiatives through higher education, there have been a series of changes at different levels, including national and regional level policy changes across different country contexts. For example, India has started implementing National Education Policy 2020, which is driving paradigm shift in Indian education system with emphasis on SDG priorities.

While SDGs, as a broader global development framework, offer the overall roadmap for sustainable development, the studies and experiences show that the contextual factors play important role in adaptation of SDGs in Higher Education Institutions (HEIs) and Universities. The leadership capacity building of HEIs is an important step to manage the desired changes in the institutions in terms of strategic planning and action with focus on local adaptation of SDGs in respective institutional context.

The Educational Alliance for Sustainable Development (EASD), launched by 6 founding partner institutions with the strategic support of the state Government of Gujarat (India), introduces this online Academic Leadership for Sustainable Development for middle and senior leadership professionals, working in the HEIs and Universities in the Global South countries.

Objective:

- Encouraging peer-group experience sharing with aim to understand the role of contextual issues, guiding SDG-linked academic planning and implementation at institutional level.
- Developing a collective understanding of priority areas from change management process perspective towards localization of SDGs.
- Strengthening collective action for institutional level SDG mainstreaming through teaching, training, research and outreach activities.

For Whom:

- Those working in senior or middle management roles in higher education institutions in the HEIs and universities in the countries in the Global South (including Deputy Vice Chancellor, Pro Vice Chancellor, Rector, Provost, Vice President, Dean and Directors)
- Scholars and consultants with interest in change management for SDG mainstreaming in academic institutions

About Us:

Realizing the greater need for collective cross-border academic partnerships in post COVID-19 scenario in Global South countries, Atmiya University, Rajkot (Gujarat) joined hand with other founding institutional and strategic partners in form of South-South 17: Educational Alliance for Sustainable Development (SS17-EASD), which we commonly refer to as EASD. The EASD was launched on 5th January 2022 by signing partnership MoU with the Department of Education, Government of Gujarat during International Conference of Academic Institutions (Pre-Vibrant Gujarat Conference). Through SS17-EASD, we agree to work on a common platform to drive collaborative efforts, for training, capacity building, research & outreach on identified SDG related issues in the Global South. We aim to complement the efforts of other stakeholders (including alliances and initiatives) globally in effective implementation of SDGs.

If interested, please join us in our journey towards sustainability together. For details about the EASD & Atmiya University, may please refer to:
